Compression Therapy is one of the oldest treatments known to man, widely documented and studied down the centuries. It is a key practice in the management of phlebolympological disorders that affect more than one quarter of the population as demonstrated by myriad scientific publications and the latest evidence based medicine. Despite this, however, Italy still has no regulations governing the quality of compression stockings and bandages, unlike other European countries where only compression therapy articles meeting regulatory quality standards are reimbursed by the national health service.

The Seminar on compression Therapy will take stock of the state-of-the-art reports in the field, comparing the experience of many Italian and European experts. The Seminar is dedicated to the late Robert Stemmer, a phlebologist of the world renown whose fundamental work helped place Compression Therapy in phlebology within a recognized scientific framework.
